How to Navigate NJ Search & Seizure Law Without Floundering on the Shoals of Constitutional Doctrine, Part 2

AAG Ron Susswein
New Jersey Division of Criminal Justice

January 5, 2010

Richard J. Hughes Justice Complex: 4th Floor Conference Center

9:30 a.m. - 12:30 p.m.

This seminar will present a practical approach to handling motions to suppress evidence by offering an easy-to-use analytical model that works in practically every kind of police-citizen encounter and that can help practitioners quickly spot search and seizure issues. The seminar will focus on how to identify and resolve the legal and factual issues that are actually in dispute and will include an update on significant recent decisions that may reveal the course that the New Jersey courts have charted for the future of search and seizure jurisprudence. Beyond presenting the analytical template, the seminar will address a number of hot topics, including: What remains of the Automobile Exception after State v. Pena-Flores? When will telephonic warrants be available during unplanned roadside encounters? When can the Attenuated Taint (“Break in the Chain”) Doctrine save the State’s case? Can it really be true that consent has emerged as the most reliable exception to the warrant requirement? How long must police on a raid wait after “knocking and announcing,” and when can they use a “flash bang”? When can officers conduct a protective search for weapons based upon a “tip,” and how can prosecutors distinguish their cases from Florida v. J.L.
