The participants, in turn, will perform in a series of learn-by-doing workshops, in which they will incorporate what they learned from the presentations and others in dealing with discrete phases of the trial process. All participants then will "try" their case in a mock trial on the last day of the program.

Introduction

This intensive four-day advocacy program is intended to enhance the participants’ trial skills in a constructive and positive learning environment facilitated by experienced attorneys serving as faculty. While the program will challenge participants to perform at their best, the program’s primary goal is to afford participants the opportunity to build upon the skills they have, take what they learn and apply it during their subsequent performances, and to finish the program with a better understanding of how to persuasively and professionally further their clients’ interests at trial.

The program will contain a mix of topical presentations on various aspects of trial practice and “learn-by-doing” workshops. The emphasis in the workshops will be on participant performance of various trial skills followed by constructive faculty critique. Each participant’s performance will be critiqued by two faculty members during each workshop. Starting on Day 1, certain workshops will be video recorded. In these instances, each participant will also participate in a one-on-one review of his or her performance with a third faculty member. The program will conclude with a “trial,” for which the participants will be paired in trial teams.

For purposes of this program, each participant has been designated as either an “A” or a “B”. The A’s will represent the State and the B’s will represent defendant Joseph O’Neill throughout the program. Participants will remain an “A” or “B” as designated throughout the program. We will follow the State evidence and procedural rules during the program.

The program is very intensive. There is not much preparation time available during the program. Before arriving at the program, participants should become thoroughly familiar with the materials and prepare for each workshop before it begins. We recommend that participants review Steven Lubet, Modern Trial Advocacy (4th ed. 2009); Thomas A. Mauet, Trial Techniques (8th ed. 2010); or similar text, to help prepare for the program.

During the program, each participant will be assigned to examine a witness. Participants should also prepare to play their side’s witnesses as well. Playing a witness is part of the program. We believe that you will find it to be a valuable learning experience. Witness roles must be realistic; participants should attempt to the best of their ability to portray the actual personality of the witness.

We have every confidence that all participants will find this to be an instructive, challenging and rewarding program.

Welcome; Opening Statements Presentation; Case Theory Workshop; Opening Statements Workshop; Fundamentals of Direct Examination Presentation; Direct Examination Workshop

This morning will begin with the presentation: Opening Statements, which is intended to help participants develop and persuasively present their opening statements to juries.

Following the presentation will be the Case Theory Workshop. The A’s will meet as a group with their faculty facilitator, and the B’s will meet separately as a group with their faculty facilitator. For purposes of this workshop, participants should be prepared to work with each other on developing a unified case theory for their side. Case theory operates on three levels: legal theory, factual theory, and persuasive theme. Legal theory is why, as a matter of law, your client should prevail. Factual theory is a construction of the facts of the case that explains what really happened and why: it includes an analysis of the “good” and “bad” facts in the case and how they can be harmonized in a way that is favorable to your side’s case and unfavorable to the other side. Persuasive theme is a way of presenting the case to make the jury want to find in favor of your client. Once you have determined your unified case theory the rest of your case planning should evolve from it.

The second morning workshop will allow each participant to present his or her opening statement. The statement should contain all three elements of the participant’s unified case theory (i.e., legal, factual and persuasive). Among the areas participants should focus on are: capturing the jury’s attention at the outset; previewing the evidence that will be introduced to support your unified case theory and undermine the other side’s; and making the presentation as a whole persuasive in convincing the jury to later find in favor of your side. Faculty critiques will focus on whether the statement is persuasive in capturing the jury’s attention and setting the scene for an effective presentation of the evidence.

The afternoon will begin with the presentation: The Fundamentals of Direct Examination, which is intended to provide participants with a basic overview of the effective methods of direct examination, and to help participants develop a technically sound and persuasive approach for their examinations during this program.

The final session of the day is the Direct Examination Workshop. This workshop will allow each participant to practice his or her skills as they relate to four topic areas within the State v. O’Neill case file. The A’s will examine Mary Wilson and the B’s will examine Catherine Hoover.
